VENUE

The University of Évora is a public institution of higher education whose origins date back to 1559. After being closed in the 18th century, the university reopens in 1979. At the present time, it is organized in departments which are grouped in schools related to specific scientific domains, such as:

- Arts
- Social Sciences
- Technology Sciences
- Health

The São João de Deus School of Nursing, a public polytechnic institute of higher education, became part of the University of Evora in 2004.

The campus:

Blended in with the city, the campus is comprised of buildings with a high patrimonial value from different historical periods. The following buildings deserve special attention:

- Espirito Santo College
- Casa Cordovil
- Luís António Verney College
- Pedro da Fonseca College
- Mateus d' Aranda College
- Vimioso Palace
- Leões Factory
- São João de Deus School of Nursing

Outside city limits, the university reaches as far as 12km at the Mitra Centre. There are also two experimental estates in the south of Alentejo and several other units scattered over different cities in the south of Portugal where teaching and researching activities are carried out.

University demographics

The University of Evora has around 5100 students enrolled in graduate courses, 2200 in Master's courses and 900 in PhD courses. Moreover, it has a teaching staff of 640, of whom more than 83% hold a PhD degree, and an administrative staff of 470.

GOOD TO KNOW

ABOUT Évora

Evora is surrounded by the Alentejo, a region of sun-baked olive groves, fortified towns and traditional villages, all of which are a joy to explore from Evora. Evora and the Alentejo offer a truly unique Portuguese experience, with a distinctive heritage, delicious regional cuisines and an infectious unhurried pace of life, a consequence of the sweltering hot summer months.

Evora may not be as famous or instantly recognisable as other larger Portuguese cities, but it is a destination that should be high on the list of locations to visit while on holiday in Portugal. This article will provide an introduction to Evora and is divided into three sections; the first section is tourist information, the second section contains practicalities including travel and weather information, and the third section provides details of the main tourist attractions.
